

Alexandria Gazette.

FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 4 1882.

Victor Hugo's Daughter. Victor Hugo has a daughter, Adele, who has now for ten years been the inmate of a private lunatic asylum in the neighborhood of Paris. She is now about 50 years of age and the story is a sad one. Some eighteen years ago she fell in love with a naval officer who had some property in England and several estates in Trinidad. Her relatives were opposed to her marriage, but as she was of full age she carried her point, and the newly-married couple proceeded to the West Indies. After a few years of life together the Commodore abandoned his wife, whose previous eccentricity under this blow rapidly developed into insanity. In her rare lucid moments she has been heard to say: "If he had not abandoned me I should not have lost my reason." She found herself left without resources, and in her distress she appealed to her illustrious father. The help he sent she placed upon the carpet and told the tradespeople to help themselves. The first comers took all, whereupon the old negro servant advised her to write again to her father. In the interval poverty and distress were endured, which intensified the mania, and finally the poet sent for her to come home. Her insanity is mild and harmless. She can reason well, and her memory is good; but suddenly, while at the table, she will put her foot in her pocket. Her dress is that of a young girl; her walk is very peculiar; she fills her pocket with a host of things which she picks up out of the road in her daily promenade, and one day she collects the pebbles in her path, which she replaces on her next walk. She is proud of her father's reputation, and knows his works by heart. Mlle. Adele, as she is called, is supplied with everything that can contribute to her physical comfort. She has her own servants, and she spends most of her time walking in the grounds. One day as she passed the garden where the most afflicted patients were walking, she remarked to her companion: "Poor maniac! how unhappy they must be!" Her father often visits her, and the days of his visits are red-letter days both to her and the other patients, who know him well and through him with questions, to all of which he gives satisfactory answers. While the others are about him the daughter caresses her father's face, exclaiming: "I have lost my life." She speaks in a low tone, and as he is somewhat deaf, her companions repeat what she says. In their way. Can any one imagine a more remarkable picture than this?—London Echo.
